

FREE SEMINAR:

When Should A Therapist or Educational Professional Refer A Client To An Education Lawyer?

Speaker:

Dennis McAndrews, Founder of McAndrews Law Offices, P.C.

Both In-Person

AND

Call-In Attendance Available

McAndrews Law Offices, P.C.

McAndrews Law Offices in Berwyn

OR

Via Call-In Participation

TUESDAY • MAY 22 • NOON

Lunch Provided!

Attendance/seating is limited, so preregistration is essential by contacting Ally McAndrews at amcandrews@mcandrewslaw.com or 610-648-9300

The month of May is a critical time for families who are struggling with special education issues. Final grades are approaching, evaluations are being completed, critical IEPs meetings are scheduled, and many families face life-altering decisions such as transferring to a private school, negotiations over appropriate school district programs, Extended School Year issues, major transition issues, and a wide array of other time-sensitive issues. Therapists, psychologists, counselors, tutors, educational consultants, psychiatrists, and other professionals are often reticent to suggest to struggling families to consult with an attorney. Issues such as cost and the impact upon future relationships with the school district weigh heavily upon families and their trusted professionals. In this FREE seminar, we will discuss the circumstances when families are best served by consulting an attorney, as well as when legal intervention is either unnecessary or unwise. Issues of cost will be discussed, noting that our firm provides free initial consultations, and handles a great many cases on a contingency basis where families do not provide hourly fees on an ongoing basis to our firm.